During the Institute, BancTec vice president Richard Mobley will present a session along with Tyson McDowell, chief executive officer of Benchmark Revenue Management, entitled "Banking Systems and the Healthcare Revenue Cycle."

"There is a lot of uncertainty about healthcare right now, but one thing about which there is no question is the continual growth in the volume of claims and other document-based transactions in the industry," said Chuck Corbin, chief marketing officer, BancTec. "There remains a tremendous need for solutions that remove this back-office burden, and as a result, improve the cost and efficiency of the entire healthcare business process.
